

SHERBORNE WAR MEMORIAL: FIRST WORLD WAR (1914-1919)

Compiled by Luke Mouland and George Tatham Sherborne Museum, Abbey Gatehouse, Church Lane, Sherborne, DT9 3BP E-mail: info@sherbornemuseum.co.uk Tel: 01935 812252

"At the going down of the sun and in the morning
We will remember them."

But remember whom? On August 4th 2014 a century had passed since the outbreak of hostilities signified the start of the First World War and yet that conflict – with its carnage, associated poetry and literature, haunting images, and political and human consequences - still profoundly affects and influences our emotions and imaginations: not least in the widespread appearance of a fresh feature in the urban and rural landscape at the cessation of hostilities: the war memorial to commemorate the fallen, each one unique to its own community.

Sherborne, Dorset, was a modest market town in 1914, supporting a population of around 6,000, with shops, trades and crafts of a miscellaneous commercial nature, still catering largely to its agricultural hinterland; and some industrial development, including a railway station, a gasworks, two breweries, two glove factories, two dairies and a silk mill. As in so many other towns and villages, the inhabitants 'responded to the call', and something of their contribution and the impact of the war are recorded in the pages of The Western Gazette and the minutes of the Urban District Council. In January 1920 the Urban District Council produced a Roll of Service containing the names of some eight hundred and seventy seven names of Sherbornians who served their King and Country.

The Sherborne War Memorial, outside the Abbey, with access from Half Moon Street, was designed by William Douglas Caroe FSA and executed in Doulting stone by John Merrick of Glastonbury. On 11th November 1921 the unveiling ceremony was performed by the Earl of Shaftesbury. Two years later one hundred and seventy five names of the fallen were inscribed on metal plates and attached to the plinth. But the questions now begin to surface: who were these men, where did they serve, how did they die, where were they buried and what family did they leave behind them?

An opportunity therefore presents itself to research the names and provide a fitting human context and tribute to their lives and service. Sherborne Museum is currently in the process of compiling detailed biographies for each of the men recorded on the Sherborne town memorial, and aims to bring them together for publication in due course. It is anticipated that the biographies will contain details such as the parentage and family background of each individual; their employment before the war; their connection to the town, or residence on the outbreak of war; and the circumstances surrounding their death.

The names of the men we are researching can be found below, as can a separate list of those casualties who are yet to be identified. We would be very pleased to hear from anyone who has, and is willing to share, information about any of those featured – whether in the form of photographs, letters, diaries, newspaper cuttings, or family stories – to augment our own researches and ensure that we render a full and accurate account of their lives and service.
